Alaskans

The people of Alaska overwhelmingly support responsible development of the Coastal Plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Governor Frank Murkowski has urged the U.S. Congress to take a balanced approach to energy, "Opening ANWR will produce a positive ripple across Alaska, and the nation.

Every barrel of oil we produce in Alaska is one less that we must import from overseas. Issues like ANWR can often take a great deal of time before we can recognize the benefits. But make no mistake about it, victory will be ours. And with the help of organized labor, we can secure the votes that are needed. ANWR will create jobs and reduce our dependence foreign oil. In these uncertain times, what's wrong with that?"

Governor Murkowski clearly represents the views of his constituents. A recent poll shows that 75% of Alaskans agree that ANWR development should be included in a balanced energy policy.

Alaskans have the benefit of thirty years of experience with oil development in their arctic region. They know that it can be done in an environmentally sensitive manner that will not harm the land they love and respect.

Alaskans Welcome Development.
